Glaucoma Symptoms and Treatment

Glaucoma is a disease of the eye that leads to damage of the optic nerve. When the passages that carry fluid in the eye get clogged or blocked it can lead to increased internal eye pressure. The increase in internal eye pressure from glaucoma is usually what causes optic nerve damage. The optic nerves are the nerve fibers that send information from the eye to the brain. When a person gets glaucoma and the optic nerve is damaged it can cause vision loss and if untreated even blindness. At Family Vision Center we have state of the art equipment that helps in the evaluation of diseases of the retina as well as glaucoma & macular degeneration.

Glaucoma symptoms may or may not be present depending on the severity and the type of disease. Contact a Family Vision Center physician to find out if you have any symptoms of glaucoma. Glaucoma symptoms may also develop in one eye or in both eyes. Some of the general symptoms which glaucoma could present include: loss of peripheral vision, cloudy or haloed vision, nausea or headaches, light sensitivity, excessive blinking, different sized eyes, excessive tearing and decreased vision.

If diagnosed and treated in its early stages, glaucoma can be controlled, but not prevented. Proper treatment can slow or even stop the progression of glaucoma. But the damage which was already done to the optic nerve is permanent and any vision loss associated with glaucoma cannot be restored.

Treatment for glaucoma is dependent on the type of glaucoma and its severity. The typical treatment for open-angle glaucoma involves medications which increase the draining of eye fluid and/or produce less eye fluid. Laser surgery can also help in some instances to drain fluid from the eye. Closed-angle
